Summary

As followers of Jesus and his gospel of reconciliation, we long for peace, security, and the well-being of all people living in Israel and Palestine.

We have heard the cry for justice of Palestinians, especially those living under oppressive military occupation for fifty years. We are also acutely aware of antisemitism and violence inflicted upon Jews in the past and the present. The suffering of these two groups has too often been set against the other. We recognize, rather, that the legacy of Jewish suffering is intertwined with the suffering of Palestinians.

In this situation, there are Palestinians and Jews who work for justice and peace for all, rejecting violence and oppression. We are blessed to count them as partners and seek to support them and learn from them.

We confess that we, as Mennonites, as Christians, and as Americans, bear some responsibilities for the injustice and violence that both peoples have experienced historically and currently.

We commit ourselves to take active and specific steps to redress these harms. On one hand, we will oppose military occupation and seek a just peace in Israel and Palestine; on the other, we will seek deeper relationships with Jewish communities and actively oppose antisemitism.
Resolution

As followers of Jesus and his gospel of reconciliation, we long for peace, security, justice, and flourishing of all people living in Israel-Palestine, including Jews, Christians, and Muslims.¹

We have heard the cry of Palestinian Christians including Kairos Palestine, A moment of truth: A word of faith, hope and love from the heart of Palestinian suffering. The Palestinian people have suffered injustices, violence, and humiliation, including the Crusades, colonialism, and since 1967, life under Israeli military occupation² and in refugee camps throughout the Middle East. The Jewish people have suffered violence, often at the hands of western Christians, including the Inquisition, pogroms, and the atrocities of the Holocaust. Jews continue to experience antisemitism and violence in many countries today.³

The suffering of these two groups has too often been set one against the other. We recognize, rather, that the legacy of Jewish suffering is intertwined with the suffering of Palestinians. Palestinians have often borne the consequences of persecution of Jews. The longing for a secure Jewish state and hostility to Jews resulted in many Jews fleeing to Palestine and establishing the state of Israel. They displaced hundreds of thousands of Palestinians, who remain refugees, and failed to provide genuine equality for those who remained. The continued threat to the security of Jewish people around the world has been used to justify the oppressive military occupation of the West Bank and Gaza since 1967.⁴

As U.S. citizens, as Christians, and as Mennonites, we share responsibility in the harms done to Jews and Palestinians. In the two sections that follow, this resolution calls us to address both military occupation and antisemitism. As we acknowledge our own complicity in this web of violence, injustice, and suffering, we will strive, by God’s grace, to take concrete steps to address these wrongs.

Opposing Military Occupation and Seeking a Just Peace

Mennonites have been present in Israel-Palestine for more than 65 years, responding to humanitarian need, supporting sustainable development, advocating for justice, supporting reconciliation, and nurturing long-standing relationships.

We hear our Palestinian and Israeli partners in peacemaking tell us that fifty years of Israeli military occupation is a major contributor to the cycle of violence between Israelis and Palestinians. Occupation includes land confiscation, rapidly expanding Israeli settlements, home demolitions, checkpoints, walls, travel restrictions, extended administrative detention, arrest of children, and extra-judicial killings.

We hear the call from both Jews and Palestinians to have a state that affirms their peoplehood and history and that protects their unique cultures, civil rights, freedoms, security, and dignity. We recognize that for many Jews the state of Israel in its 1967 borders offers these protections. We recognize that Palestinians

¹ In this resolution, the term “Israel-Palestine” refers to the areas of the present-day state of Israel and the occupied Palestinian territories.

² “Israeli military occupation” refers to the Israeli military control of Palestinian territory seized by Israel in 1967, consisting of the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, and the Gaza Strip. (Though Israel pulled troops out of the Gaza Strip in 2005, the United Nations and human rights organizations such as Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch consider Gaza occupied territory because Israel exercises effective control of the area through control of borders, military incursions, and other means.)

³ Antisemitism refers to the discrimination against, violence toward, or stereotypes of Jews for being Jewish.

⁴ This resolution addresses harms past and present to the Jewish community worldwide and also specific policies of the Israeli government. Though many Jews feel a strong connection to the state of Israel, it is not accurate to identify or equate the Jewish people with the Israeli government.
Do not have these protections either in the state of Israel, in the Palestinian territories, or in refugee camps.

Both Israelis and Palestinians have used violence in their effort to achieve security for their own group. Some Palestinians have turned to violence to seek their freedom. We recognize that many Israelis see themselves as a minority in a hostile region. In response, Israel has developed the strongest military in the region, is the largest recipient of U.S. military aid in the world, and controls many aspects of Palestinian life. Yet Israelis continue to feel threatened and under attack. Violence has not been effective for either Palestinians or Israelis and threatens to dehumanize and corrupt both communities.

But there are also Palestinian and Israeli peacemakers who reject violence and militarism, resist injustice without weapons, and take great risks to work for a just peace. They believe that security cannot be achieved for one group without security for all others living in the region. They reduce fear, heal traumas, and build bridges. This helps create the context for genuine and fair negotiations. As Mennonite followers of Jesus, the Prince of Peace, we are inspired and challenged by these partners.

In our own nation, we are mindful of historic and systemic injustices and the ways some of us have benefited from and are complicit in these wrongs, including the forced removal of indigenous people from their land, the legacy of slavery and racism, and a broken immigration system. While the history and dynamics of each injustice are unique, the work for justice in any one place is linked to the work for justice everywhere. We continue to be called to name and address our part in harms at home, in Israel-Palestine, and throughout the world.

Confession and Lament

As Western Christians, Mennonites, and U.S. citizens, we confess and lament the ways we have supported the military occupation, which has grievously harmed and traumatized the Palestinian people and has not served the well-being and long-term security of Israelis:

- Failing to adequately understand the harms done to Palestinians in the creation of the state of Israel, as second-class citizens of Israel, and under Israel’s military occupation
- Failing to understand the dramatic power imbalance experienced by Palestinians living under Israeli military occupation
- Being too slow to relate to Palestinian Christians as part of the body of Christ
- Embracing or tolerating Christian Zionist theology, which too often has disregarded the well-being of Palestinian people
- Accepting negative stereotypes of Palestinians, especially those based on anti-Muslim and anti-Arab biases
- Not adequately supporting both Palestinian and Israeli peacemakers, who reject violence and choose the creative and courageous path of active non-violence
- Contributing tax dollars to the $3.8 billion of annual U.S. military aid to Israel, some of which undergirds the military occupation, and failing to challenge U.S. government support for the military occupation
- Benefiting from companies that are actively participating in the occupation.

5 Israel includes Jewish and Palestinian citizens. Israel’s population is 20% Palestinian. When this resolution refers to Israelis, it includes this often forgotten minority. This does not refer to Palestinians living under occupation, who do not have Israeli citizenship.

6 Christian Zionist theology advocates the gathering of the Jews in Biblical Israel, typically as a prerequisite for the Second Coming of Jesus, and that Christians should support the state of Israel.
Commitments

Partnering with Palestinian and Israeli Peacemakers: We commit to continue to learn from, partner with, and pray for Palestinian and Israeli groups and individuals working for peace with justice. We applaud individuals and groups who organize nonviolent protests and movements, refuse military service, and build bridges across divisions.

Understanding the Realities of Occupation: We encourage Mennonite congregations and area conferences to learn about the situation, including studying Kairos Palestine. We urge our members who travel to Israel-Palestine to seek out diverse Palestinian and Israeli voices to better understand their experiences and perspectives.

Engaging Christian Zionism: We urge pastors, teachers, and appropriate church agencies to engage Christian Zionism within our own church and in the broader American Christian community, encouraging Christian Zionists to enter into conversation and relationship with our Palestinian Christian partners and, as followers of Jesus, to pursue a nonviolent, inclusive, and just vision for Jewish and Palestinian coexistence in the Holy Land.

Advocating with the U.S. Government: We urge members, congregations and denominational offices of Mennonite Church USA to advocate with the U.S. government to end military aid and arms sales in the region, and to support measures that pressure Israel to freeze settlement construction, respect the civil rights of Palestinian citizens of Israel and the rights of refugees, end the occupation, and work for a just peace in accordance with international law.

Avoiding Economic Support for Occupation while Investing in Peace and Justice: As people who seek to follow Jesus in daily life, we know that how we spend and invest our money is an important part of our faith life. Concerns about simplicity, fair trade, and sustainability guide our individual and institutional purchasing decisions. We urge individuals and congregations to avoid the purchase of products associated with acts of violence or policies of military occupation, including items produced in settlements. Likewise, Mennonites have spent years developing investment strategies that reflect our deepest convictions. We want to invest in peace with justice, not to profit or benefit from the suffering of others. We ask Everence, on behalf of Mennonite Church USA, to periodically convene representatives of Mennonite related organizations and agencies involved in the region, in order to share counsel and review investment practices for the purpose of withdrawing investments from companies that are profiting from the occupation. We urge all Mennonite Church USA agencies, related organizations, and members to similarly review their investments.

Strengthening Relationships with Muslim and Palestinian-American communities: Recognizing the growing anti-Muslim and anti-Arab prejudice within our culture, we commit to strengthening our relationships with Muslim communities, educating ourselves about our similarities and differences, and working for equality, tolerance, and acceptance of Muslims in our society.
Opposing Antisemitism and Seeking Right Relationship with Jewish Communities

Both Mennonites and Jews have had the experience of being religious minorities in western Christian contexts. During the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, Catholic and Protestant leaders persecuted both Mennonites and Jewish people. At times, Mennonites and Jews were neighbors as they were given refuge by tolerant authorities. Nonetheless, in many settings Mennonites adopted the negative attitudes of the prevailing Christian culture towards our Jewish neighbors.

Confession and Lament

As Western Christians, Mennonites, and U.S. citizens, we confess and lament the ways we have participated in harms against Jewish people:

- Failing to do the hard work of examining our participation in antisemitic belief and practice
- Bearing complicity in the Holocaust that killed six million Jews, failing to respond to Jewish refugees fleeing Europe, and failing to fully examine the historic record of Mennonite complicity in these atrocities
- Ignoring the gravity of ongoing antisemitism and acts of violence against Jewish people
- Failing to recognize how these past and present threats contribute to the need for security for Jewish people
- Neglecting to build relationships with Jewish representatives and communities in the United States and to recognize diverse expressions of their hopes and fears
- Failing to understand the significance of the state of Israel for many Jewish people and the diversity of perspectives and understandings among Jews related to Israel and Zionism.

Commitments

Examining the Legacy of Antisemitism: Mennonite Church USA staff have raised seed money and initiated plans for several conferences in the next biennium on topics including Mennonite involvement in the Holocaust and how we read scripture in light of the Holocaust. We affirm these efforts and encourage Mennonite schools and agencies to consider similar initiatives. We request that sponsors of each event record and share findings within Mennonite Church USA and with Mennonite World Conference to explore ways we might continue to address antisemitism in our tradition.

Building Relationships with Jewish Communities

- We call on Mennonites to cultivate relationships with Jewish representatives and bodies in the U.S.
- We encourage area conferences to commission at least one congregation to reach out to a local synagogue in their community to build relationships, listen deeply to their experiences, and learn from them.
- We encourage Mennonites to build relationships and partnerships with Jewish groups and individuals in the U.S. who pursue their calling to social justice and peacemaking.
- As we cultivate relationships with Jewish communities in the U.S. and Israel we will be attentive to and seek a deeper understanding of the diverse perspectives that Jewish people have of the state of Israel and Zionism.

Prayer and Action

We commit ourselves to ‘pray without ceasing’ (1 Thessalonians 5.17) for all people in Israel-Palestine, especially for those impacted by violence and those working for peace, even as we take concrete steps to examine our own complicity in injustices past and present.

We request that a report on the activities related to this resolution be submitted to the next Mennonite Church USA delegate assembly.
Clarifications

1. Why should Mennonite Church USA be involved in Israel-Palestine? As Mennonites, Christians, and U.S. citizens, we are already involved in both helpful and harmful ways. The appeal of Palestinian Christian brothers and sisters challenges us to pray and work for peace with justice in that land. A history of antisemitism, especially among Western Christians, compels us to wrestle with our role in the origins and perpetuation of this injustice and conflict. As citizens of the United States, whose government provides massive financial, military, and political support for the state of Israel and its policies of occupation, we feel a particular responsibility for the ongoing suffering. Finally, conflict in that small area contributes to mistrust and violence throughout the region and beyond. Our commitment to the Prince of Peace beckons us to strive for God’s justice and peace for all the people of this region.

2. How did this resolution develop? A resolution on Israel-Palestine was brought to delegates at the Mennonite Church USA assembly in Kansas City in 2015. Delegates tabled that resolution, asking that it be revised, and called for a period of learning and discernment as we seek to support Palestinian and Israeli peacemakers. Through numerous drafts, a three-person writing committee prepared this resolution in consultation with a diverse, ten-person reference group and tested this resolution with a range of Palestinian, Israeli, and Jewish partners.

3. What is Kairos Palestine? Kairos Palestine was prepared and distributed in 2009 by a broad group of Palestinian Christian leaders including Catholic, Orthodox, Anglicans, Lutherans, and Evangelicals. This document is especially compelling to Mennonites because of its deep commitment to Jesus’ way of love even in the face of great suffering and severe injustice. It includes a call for economic boycotts and divestment from companies that support the occupation of the West Bank and Gaza. It affirms that only a nonviolent resistance based on love of enemy and a repudiation of revenge can lead to just peace and reconciliation.

4. Have Mennonites supported using financial pressure for the cause of justice and peace on other matters? As people who seek to follow Jesus in daily life, Mennonites have long sought to practice our faith in our economic activities. Refusal to buy war bonds, for example, was a principled and costly decision for Mennonites in decades past. Mennonites have been at the forefront of developing socially-responsible investment practices. Everence, our denominational stewardship agency, has long employed investment screens that preclude profiting from military production, the alcohol industry, and companies with a record of human rights abuses. Ten Thousand Villages has been a leader in promoting fair trade purchasing, and increasingly churches and members consistently purchase fair trade coffee. In response to a denominational resolution about human trafficking and child slavery, Everence served as a primary force in leading American chocolate companies to shift towards child labor-free cocoa-sourcing, which especially impacts communities in West Africa. These are but a few of the ways in which Mennonites have sought to make responsible consumer and investment choices and use our economic power for the cause of justice and peace.

5. What is BDS? How does this resolution relate to BDS? The BDS Movement (boycott, divestment, and sanctions) was launched in 2005 by 170 Palestinian civil society organizations calling for economic, cultural, and academic boycotts of Israel. The appeal named three demands: an end to occupation of the West Bank and Gaza, equal rights for the Palestinian citizens of Israel, and the right of return for displaced refugees. This initiative was promoted in light of failed efforts to bring peace through negotiations or international mechanisms such as the United Nations. There are vigorous critics of BDS who raise a range of concerns. Many Palestinian Christian groups as well as some Jewish peace organizations support BDS as a nonviolent alternative to violent liberation efforts.

This resolution offers a unique Mennonite voice. It opposes Israeli military occupation and U.S. support while intentionally affirming the need to reach out to build stronger relationships with Jewish communities. This resolution calls on Mennonites to apply long-standing stewardship principles and strongly affirms Palestinian and Israeli advocates of nonviolence. While the resolution does not call for a boycott of all Israeli goods or for academic or cultural boycotts, it urges Mennonites to avoid purchases and investments directly related to the military occupation of Palestinian territories.

6. Why is it important for Mennonites to address antisemitism? Mennonites, like most western Christians, have been parties to the antisemitism of the prevailing culture. As members of an Historic Peace Church, many Mennonites may assume that our tradition responded differently at critical historical moments. Significant scholarship, including recent research, highlights ways some Mennonites were complicit in the Holocaust. As a faith community, we have not done the hard work of examining our historic complicity or the ways antisemitism has shaped our perspectives and life, including how we read the Bible. Uncovering, confessing, and repenting for our antisemitism and historic complicity in bringing harm to Jewish people is critical for our own integrity and faithfulness.
We pray it may also contribute to healing and to the cause of peace.

In recent years, Mennonite Church USA has taken small steps on this path. We have compiled a bibliography on Mennonite-Jewish relations, have acquired a grant to facilitate consultations, have encouraged an evolving alliance between Mennonite and Jewish activists and scholars for social justice around the world, and have begun exploring opportunities for more formal relations with Jewish leaders. There are individuals among us who have entered deeply into relationship with Jewish colleagues and partners. They will be valuable resources to the broader church as we continue this journey.

7. Is this resolution consistent with the principles of Mennonite peacebuilding? The resolution embraces a restorative justice framework, naming ways Mennonites have participated in harms and taking concrete steps to address these wrongs. The resolution pursues a “two-handed” approach, both speaking clearly against any injustice and violence and also extending a hand of understanding and relationship to all parties. We will do both, not making one conditional upon the other, even if pressed to do so. The resolution recognizes that it is difficult for injustices to be heard when there is a major power imbalance. Addressing this power imbalance is part of the work of peacemaking and reconciliation.

8. Does this resolution advocate for a "two-state" or "one-state" solution? This resolution does not advocate for any particular solution or any particular vision of statehood. Within both communities there are many differing ideas on this matter. Both Israeli and Palestinian people desire to live in safety and freedom and it is ultimately up to them, not Mennonites, to determine what that will look like.
